Green Team Update - Everything in its Place

If stuff is in its place there is less waste!!

Wasting household items like clothes, food, and tools can be quite harmful to the environment. It is important to reduce your amount of waste. This is done by organizing and cleaning your home so you can easily find all your things. Have you ever realized that there were so many things you could have been using had you organized your stuff? We encourage you to organize your spaces, this way you will be less likely to over consume and waste.

IT'S OKAY TO NOT BE OKAY

PARENTS ARE STRUGGLING.

Parenting in this age of pandemic quarantining and fluctuating school structures is complicated and demanding. Factors such as isolation, caregiver overload, juggling responsibilities and managing expectations, as well as societal pressures are all common challenges that are currently having a profound impact on the physical and mental health of parents in our community.

Challenges will arise in life, often unexpectedly, but it is possible to parent confidently through it!

Join us for a FREE solutions focused workshop to validate your challenges and experiences, support your ability to build capacity and resilience, cope with these real stressors and receive practicable strategies to support your physical and mental health to facilitate sustainable wellbeing for yourself and your family.
